

OTHER PACK EQUIPMENT

042314

In addition to a minimum quantity of staple foods and water, there are other items which should be included in your Emergency Pack to make living easier, improve sanitation, and guard against boredom and psychological stress.

The basic list of items required is the same whether kept in a refuge or in the trunk of the family car. For people who do not have their own means of transportation, the "starred" items should be kept in a suitcase or other suitable container which can be carried.

YOUR EMERGENCY
 PACK

In the event of a nuclear attack, you may find yourself in one of two situations. First, if you live in a probable Target Area, you will be instructed to evacuate with your family. In the second situation, you may be living in an area located in the path of "fallout"—the radioactive dust which is carried hundreds of miles downwind following a bomb burst.

In either case, whether you evacuate or take refuge in your own home, all utilities and other supplies could be cut off or seriously curtailed for many days. During this period, you will require water, food and other essentials in order to survive.

In case evacuation is ordered, it will be necessary to have everything packed and ready to move on very short notice. If you take refuge, you will be confined for several days and therefore your requirements must be stored and checked ahead of time.

This pamphlet contains suggestions for your Emergency Pack. Sufficient food and water for seven days is recommended. When reviewing the following list, pay particular attention to those items marked "Essential".

PLAN TODAY TO SURVIVE TOMORROW

When selecting food for your family's Emergency Pack, consider food preferences and individual appetites.

SUITABLE CONTAINERS INCLUDE:

You should:

- 1 Change the stored water about once a month and keep foods fresh by rotation through normal use every six months.
- 2 Include special food needs for infants and invalids.
- 3 Foods selected must be in cans, glass jars, sealed packages or vacuum cans.
- 4 Choose size of cans according to the size of your family.
- 5 Select foods which may be eaten cold if necessary.
- 6 Store foods in containers which may be easily picked up and carried to the trunk of the car if evacuation becomes necessary.

- Suitcase • Strong mesh shopping bag • Canvas or utility bag with handles • Child's school bag with over-the-shoulder strap • Covered picnic basket • Heavy cardboard carton — tied with heavy cord.
