

Call for Question Submissions!

Dear high school teachers,

The Johnson Shoyoma School of Public Policy and the Diefenbaker Canada Centre at the University of Saskatchewan are developing a new online High School resource: Engaged Citizenship: Exploring Pathways to Leadership. This nation-wide program (available in French and English) will provide valuable learning opportunities, engaging activities, and career resources for high school classrooms.

To ensure this program is relevant to Canadian high school students, we want to hear from you!

One of the major components of this education program will be an in-depth exploration of the roles of Lieutenant Governor and Territorial Commissioner, including their positions within the legislative assembly. To demonstrate how these unique, appointed positions are held by everyday Canadians who made outstanding contributions to their communities, current representatives will be invited to answer questions provided by high school students from across Canada.

If you would like to participate, please share the accompanying poster with your classroom and invite your students to put their heads together and get creative! Video-submissions are encouraged and if selected, will be featured in the recorded interviews (with permission and media release)! Non-recorded submissions are also welcome! Please email your student questions to dief.centre@usask.ca, or contact us for more information!

We look forward to hearing from you!

Sincerely,

Kirsten Falzarano

Kirsten Falzarano, PhD
Programs and Outreach Coordinator
Diefenbaker Canada Centre
University of Saskatchewan
k.falzarano@usask.ca